hereditary muscular dystrophies have revealed that each muscle-specific proteinopathy exhibits a distinctive molecular pattern of the underlying pathogenetic mechanism, with mutations in structural or functional genes causing defects of muscle energy metabolism, protein degradation, or the cytoskeleton. Here, we report the results of genetic, biochemical, and cell biological investigations of a patient with a distal muscular dystrophy caused by a C(566)X [G(567)X] point mutation in the COL6A1 gene, resulting in a premature termination codon (PTC). Molecular studies of this patient revealed that the novel mutation causes a PTC in the alpha1 (VI) collagen gene, resulting in a truncation of the alpha1 (VI) collagen chain. The affected collagen chain is a component of the extracellular matrix. Biochemical and cell biological investigations of the C(566)X [G(567)X] mutation led to the identification of increased aminopeptidase M levels, autophagy, as well as ubiquitin-proteasome dysfunction, implicating this proteolytic system in the molecular pathogenesis of the disease. We propose that dysfunction of the ubiquitin-proteasome system is the common origin of the various mechanisms involved in the pathogenesis of muscular dystrophies with primary genetic defects in the genes encoding the structural proteins of the muscle cell.
