Q: Standard for what data should be gathered about a user? Where to start? I want to get some data about my users/customers, for instance the following: Age Country School Location etc What is the best way for doing that? What standard are there for this? Do Google Analytics have a recommendation for this? A: What you are looking for is called personalization. There is no single standard or guideline to this. The fact is that it is entirely user-dependent. There are a few things you can do to make this work for you: Use the Custom Audience feature Set up a Dedicated Custom Dimension with a value such as UX_UserID for each user When creating a new contact record, assign a unique ID to the user and add an association to a contact standard field All of these options have pros and cons and you should take a look at this document on GA personalization.

Q: How to load the widgets in the second screen of Tabs I have two widgets, which need to be loaded in the tabs. For example, on tab A, there is a label, which I want to show in tab B. And in tab B, I have a label as well, which needs to be showed in tab A.

processing in dementia patients, using measures of simple auditory processing which are reliable and relatively easy to administer. The basic hypothesis to be tested is whether these tests, which are thought to tap into auditory perceptual processes, can predict the level of functioning of dementia patients. These measures have been found to be different in healthy and demented subjects, and the specific research goal is to determine whether such auditory perceptual deficits can be reliably detected in patients prior to apparent clinical decline. Ligand structural requirements for glycosphingolipid receptor binding in the rat kidney. Binding of the photolabile <sup>14</sup>C-labeled glycosphingolipid analogues to membrane fragments from rat kidney cortex was investigated.
Binding was time dependent (0.5 h to 6 h); it was shown to be selective for glycosphingolipids containing the same carbohydrate moiety as the native ligand. No significant effect on ligand binding was seen after systematic variation of the sulfate head group at the non-reducing terminus of the carbohydrate. However, exchange of the fatty acid
